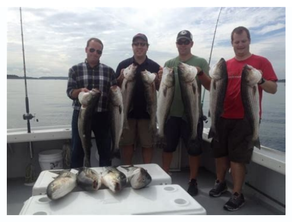
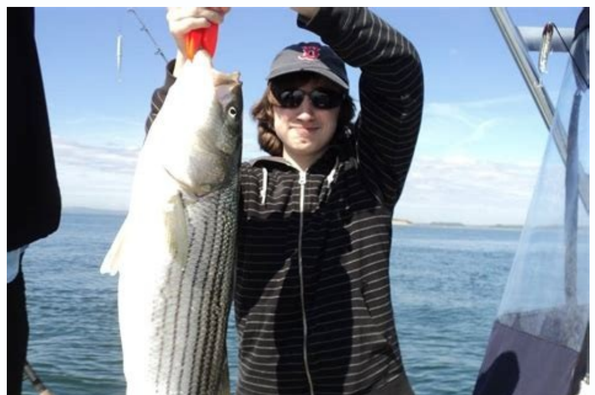
Striped bass fishing report boston harbor

I'm not robot!





Our 2022 season has been very good. Striped Bass are in Boston Harbor. Big fish in the 40″ size as well as keeper fish between So here is the 2020 fishing report so far. The flounder fishing season is excellent. You should consider planning a trip. We have a great This week we starting to see more fish than we did last week. The flounder are starting to move well. We also went offshore for Tough Fishing and Great Fishing! This weekend we have seen everything fishing has to offer. Some very slow challenging action to great lights out action. Big bass are moving into the harbor We are starting to see more big striped bass moving into the Boston harbor. The past few days Great action this weekend for striped bass. We started off the trip fishing for mackerel. We took the live mackerel and use them as bait These are the first keeper striped bass of our 2018 fishing season. These fish are in the 30 to 31 inch size class. The northern Flounder fishing is getting really good. This group got these fish with in 2.5 hours. If you would enjoy some flounder fishing now is the The fishing is still good. Sometimes we have to work hard to find the fish, but we have been getting it done. Every trip is One of our corporate groups this week challenged us to catch our limit. We started our trip with slow fishing and the pressure was on. Casting Sinking shooting heads like a 300-400 gr. Depth charge and baitfish patterns fished on a varied retrieve should tell you what they want. Videos On The Water’s Chris Megan, Anthony Deicicchi, and Jimmy Fee venture offshore for an exciting tuna adventure aboard the 32-foot Regulator. Saltwater The fish tipped a local lobsterman’s scale at 161.5 pounds and was measured to be 72 inches long. Report Pogy schools just outside of Boston Harbor continue to attract big bass while offshore, pelagic hunters are finding tuna east of Stellwagen and beyond. Featured Offshore fishing tournaments offer big parties, big payouts, and big heartbreak. Post Catch a special fishing seminar at a local West Marine Report Much of Massbay is like a cow pasture with loads of big bass chasing pogy schools and little effort needed to find them. Videos On The Water ventures out to Western Massachusetts to target northern pike on the Fly with Dan and Tom Harrison of Harrison Anglers. Most striped bass in Massachusetts come from Chesapeake Bay, Delaware River, and Hudson River. Striped bass normally do not migrate during the first two years of life. From tagging research, we have learned that striped bass migrate northward in the spring and summer months and return south in the fall. Fish from Chesapeake Bay exhibit more extensive migrations and are caught as far north as the Bay of Fundy in coastal Canada. A few striped bass stay in Massachusetts waters during winter. Striped bass can live up to 40 years and reach weights greater than 100 pounds. However, individuals larger than 50 pounds are rare. The all-tackle angling record fish was caught in Connecticut in 2011 and weighed 81½ pounds. The Massachusetts record is a 73-pound fish caught at Nauset Beach in 1981. Females grow larger than males and most stripers over 30 pounds are female. The number of eggs produced by a female striped bass is directly related to the size of its body; a 12-pound female may produce about 850,000 eggs, and a 55-pound female about 4,200,000 eggs. Males are able to spawn starting when they are two or three years of age, but females do not begin to spawn until they are at least five or six years of age. Stripers reproduced in rivers and the brackish areas of estuaries. Spawning occurs from the spring to early summer, with the greatest activity occurring when the water warms to about 65 degrees F. The eggs drift in currents until they hatch 1 ½ to 3 days after being fertilized. Because newly hatched larvae are nearly helpless; striped bass suffer their highest rate of natural mortality during the several weeks after hatching. Striped bass are rarely found more than several miles from the shoreline. Anglers usually catch stripers in river mouths, in small, shallow bays and estuaries, and along rocky shorelines and sandy beaches. The striped bass is a schooling species, moving about in small groups during the first two years of life, and thereafter feeding and migrating in large schools. Striped bass eat a variety of foods, including fish such as alewives, flounder, sea herring, menhaden, mummichogs, sand lance, silver hake, tomcod, smelt, silversides, and eels, as well as lobsters, crabs, soft clams, small mussels, sea worms, and squid. Feeding occurs throughout the day, although night feeding does occur. Because striped bass are so abundant in Massachusetts waters during summer, their feeding can impact populations of prey important to other fish species. Learn about striped bass tagging in MA Learn about the diet of striped bass in MA Although it doesn't seem logical, many anglers have found that dark lures are most effective for night fishing. Remember that bass don't have the same vision as people. [source: Bass Fishing.org] It turns out, the bass can see the dark lures more easily, because they are lit by the sky. Dark colors, like black, purple, deep blue, brown and burgundy, create a silhouette on the water that the bass can see. [sources: Hood, Kentucky Dept. of Fish and Wildlife Resources, Watts]Another recommendation is to use a black, short-arm spinner bait, with a single large Colorado blade. The blade and short arm together create a thump and vibration that attracts bass even at a distance. Bass are attracted to vibrations as well as to sound and color, so the combination is important. Bass feeding at night rely on feeling rather than seeing their prey. Just as you care about the flash of the lure during the day, you need to be concerned with its thump at night. [source: Cork] If the bass are feeding primarily on bream, use a larger thump than if they are feeding on shad. You may also want to vary the size of the Colorado blade to see what's working best. [source: Cork]If you're fishing in smaller lakes, streams or even farm ponds, don't neglect the classic black jitterbug, which creates a lot of noise. [source: Hood] Another strategy for making some noise is to use rattles on crankbait, spinnerbait or inside a plastic worm. You should be equipped with 7- to 10-inch plastic worms, 4- to 6-inch skirted double-tailed grubs, and large lizards made of soft plastic. [source: Hood, Kentucky Dept. of Fish and Wildlife Resources]What are some of the special tricks of fishing for bass at night? Cast a line out over to the next section. Ocean water temps have climbed into the low 70s after an extended heat wave in New England and the forecast shows that we’re due to enter a second stretch of oppressive heat this weekend. The local striped bass population has responded by moving away from the beaches to the cooler waters of the nearshore reefs of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Many anglers have found success trolling various lures around deep structure. Bonito have made landfall on The Vineyard this week while more and bigger schools of chub macks continue to show in Rhode Island and eastern Long Island Sound. Make sure to watch the CT portion of the report as well for the story of a nearly 30-pound fly-caught carp. Martha from Surfland told me fishing has slowed up to some degree but there are still plenty of school sized stripers being landed on daily basis. The night-time action is much better than the daytime bite. There are keepers coming off the beach and the Merrimack River but they have been a bit fussy this week. Mackerel, sea worms and pogies all make great bait either alive (if you can get them) or dead. There have been a few sporadic reports of bluefish. Martha seems to think there are plenty of fish they are just full, with all the bait around and becoming a little lazy and slow with the warmer water. Surfland is open seven days a week. More
